

Meet Ametus

Ametus, a hardworking farmer, used loans funded by WorldWide Microfinance to invest in more goats for his flock, bringing him income stability and financial confidence.

Ametus' Story

Ametus, a farmer who raises goats and cultivates crops, was feeling stuck before he learned about Worldwise's microloans. He was struggling to feed his family of five during the dry season, when most farming comes to a halt. He wanted to experiment with dry season gardening, but was afraid to make the investment in new crops and agricultural products without capital to fall back on.

With his first loan, Ametus purchased more goats to grow his flock. Because goats breed at a fast rate and are valuable for their dairy and meat products, they are a smart investment, allowing Ametus to better provide for his family.

Feeling more confident about his finances, Ametus took on the new challenge of gardening during the dry-season. Ametus added okra, bean leaves, and other nutrient-rich, dry-season crops to his farm in November 2025, a bold step toward food security and income diversification for his entire family.
